"Looking Ahead: Greensboro's Vision for 2026"

by Nathaniel "Trey" Davis

As we close out 2025, it's worth pausing to reflect on what we've accomplished together, looking ahead to the opportunities of the coming year.

This year, Greensboro made measurable progress in expanding attainable housing, improving public safety, and strengthening our economic base. We advanced infrastructure projects that will serve generations, invested in youth programs, and expanded partnerships with nonprofits, schools, and businesses. We worked to ensure each resident—regardless of neighborhood or

NEWS
NOTESThe Story of Jasmine Crockett's
Political Journey From Local Politics to an Historic Senate Run

Long before her viral read on Marjorie Taylor Greene, Rep. Jasmine Crockett has been committed to doing the work of the people. Now, she has her sights set on the Senate.

Even if you don't follow politics that closely, you've probably heard of Rep. Jasmine Crockett (D.-TX). She stays in the headlines for speaking truth to power, using her position on the House Oversight and Accountability committee to maintain ethics and efficiency in government.

Since her arrival in Washington, Crockett has been a rising star in the Democratic party, and with her Dec. 8 announcement launching her bid to represent Texas in the United States Senate, we're sure she'll be on our radar for years to come.

Let's take a look at the amazing political journey of Representative Jazmine Crockett. Born in St. Louis, Jasmine Crockett was raised by parents who instilled in her a commitment to service – particularly to the underserved. Her father, Rev. Joseph Crockett, was a teacher and a preacher.

"It's my daddy's leadership and love in the church that raised me and inspires me to this day to be the best Congresswoman I can be," she captioned this 2023 Father's Day post on Instagram.

Crockett says her mom, Gwen, a former postal worker, has always been by her side supporting her through every endeavor. The two are seen here together in this Instagram post at her Congressional swearing in ceremony.

Rep. Crockett earned a BA in Business Administration from Rhodes College. She's also a proud member of Delta Sigma Theta Sorority, Inc.

After she and other Black students at Rhodes became victims of a series of hate crimes, Crockett decided she wanted to study law. She said it was an attorney at the Cochran Law Firm who she called her 'shero' who helped her realize the importance of good legal representation.

"I saw how much help a lawyer could be to somebody at a very confusing time," she told Darling in an interview.

In 2006, Crockett earned her J.D. at the University of Houston and went on to serve as a public defender, civil rights and criminal defense attorney. She started her own pro bono law firm in Texas focused on civil rights and criminal defense.

In 2020, Crockett turned her focus to politics and was elected to the Texas House of Representatives. While most freshman legislators tend to fade into the background, Jasmine Crockett made her presence known right away.

"Many freshmen, they just kind of sit there. They don't say a whole lot because they're trying to learn," former Texas Democratic Rep. Joe Deshotel told The Washington Examiner. "But for her, the learning curve was very short. I mean, she jumped right in."

Jasmine Crockett understands the importance of climate issues, particularly their impact on communities of color. She was a founding member of the Texas Caucus on Climate, Energy, and the Environment, a bipartisan caucus working to reduce pollution and grow the economy in Texas. She is also currently a member of the House Committee on Agriculture and the Sustainable Energy & Environment Coalition.

After serving one term in the Texas Legislature, Crockett set her sights on Washington, where she thought she could best represent the people of her state. In 2023, beat her Republican challenger and replaced retiring Chairwoman Edie Bernice Johnson as the United States Representative for Texas' 30th congressional district, which includes parts of Dallas.

While most of us may not know what the heck our congresspeople are doing when we send them to Washington, Rep. Crockett makes sure she keeps her constituents informed, posting regular updates to Instagram on her TV appearances, voting record and other initiatives in the district and Washington.

Once in Washington, Rep. Crockett got to work calling out hypocrisy in Washington with GOP members of Congress pursuing an impeachment of President Joe Biden while photos taken by federal authorities of national defense secrets stored in the bathroom of Donald Trump's Mar-A-Lago golf club in Florida circulated.

In September 2023, Crockett went viral for pointing out that Trump was keeping classified documents in a very unlikely place.

"Honestly, no one has testified on what crime they believe the President of the United States has committed," she said. "But when we start talking about things that look like evidence, they want to act like they blind. They don't know what this is. These are our national secrets looks like in the s*tter to me."

Skin tone no deterrent to Border Patrol racial profiling

Skin tone no deterrent to Border Patrol racial profiling

by Kylie Marsh, for Charlotte Post

Ali called Kerri last week after his interaction with federal agents, who were in Charlotte as part of an area sweep of immigrants in the region.

“Basically, the phone call was like, ‘Kerri, you wouldn’t believe this,’” she said.

Ali, who drives a truck for work, was pulled over in the North Tryon area. The agents approached him speaking Spanish. Ali told the agents he doesn’t speak Spanish, and cooperated by handing over his identification.

“Even after he told them he doesn’t speak Spanish, that wasn’t enough for them to be like, ‘oh, OK,’” Kerri said. “They still proceeded to ask him for his ID while he was in a work uniform.”

After the agents checked Ali’s credentials against the federal database, Kerri told The Post they informed him he “wasn’t in the system.”

“I don’t know if that was a lie, because they look stupid,” Kerri said, “if that was just something to say to breeze off the inconvenience and the racial profiling.”

Kerri and Ali are U.S.-born citizens. She posted the Instagram video as a warning to all – not just Spanish speakers or Latinos.

“He’s like, ‘I’m just working. I’m just trying to do my job,’” Kerri explained. “He was like, ‘I understand that you’re trying to do a so-called job, but the way that they’re going about it doesn’t make any sense. They’re just randomly pulling people over.’”

Kerri criticized poor coordination between agents during their Charlotte operations.

“They’re just going up to random people because they think you look a certain way,” she said. “There’s no actual system of organization,” referencing numerous videos posted to social media of agents chasing people or pulling up in vans and snatching them off the streets.

“You just don’t know what type of ICE agent you’re gonna have. Maybe one day you have an ICE agent that isn’t aggressive, then you get some that are really aggressive.”

Kerri didn’t expect her Instagram post, which surpassed 78,000 views as of Nov. 24, would get so much traction. Some viewers commented in panic, stating that they are light-skinned or have biracial children who may be targeted. Others have been negative, like one commenter who wrote Ali “should get deported.”

“You might not even be Hispanic, but if you can pass or are light-skinned, they might just question you anyway,” Kerri said in the reel. Kerri said she believes Ali didn’t think he’d be bothered by agents because he isn’t Latino or undocumented.

Since then, U.S. Rep. Alma Adams, whose congressional district includes Charlotte, posted a bulletin to Instagram reels urging those who have faced similar racial profiling to contact her local office at (704) 344-9950 or her Washington, D.C., office (202) 225-1510.

“Our community is under siege,” Adams said. “ICE and border patrol are roaming this community profiling people, picking people up, it does not matter who you are.”

Since last week, state and federal officials have released conflicting statements regarding whether Border Patrol agents are leaving the Charlotte area.

background—can benefit from our city’s growth.

But the work is far from done. In 2026, we will sharpen our focus on housing attainability, workforce development, climate resilience, and neighborhood revitalization. We will continue improving transparency, engaging the community, and aligning investments with long-term equity goals.

The vision is clear: a Greensboro that is thriving, inclusive, and prepared for the future. Achieving it will take all of us—city government, business leaders, community partners, and residents working side-by-side.

The year ahead will bring new challenges, but also new possibilities. If we meet both with the same spirit of collaboration and determination that defines this city, Greensboro’s future will be bright indeed.

Here’s to building 2026 together.

The top ten stories locally, nationally and worldwide of interest and concern of Greensboro’s African American community is as follows:

1. The number one ranked story of 2025 was Trump being sworn in as President of the United States for a second term in Washington, D.C. January 20, 2025. Later that day Trump signed numerous executive orders that included ending policies to correct centuries of racial discrimination. Executive Orders terminates diversity, equity and inclusion initiatives policies. White supremacy thrives when systems of exclusion go unaddressed, Trump pardons over 1,500 criminal defendants who participated on the January 6 insurrection attempt lead by Trump four years earlier. Most of those pardoned were white supremacists including the neo-Nazi militia Proud Boys and the racist far right militia Oath Keepers. Trump’s decision to pardon and release members of racist extremist groups signals the administration will directly support white supremacist and institutional white supremacy.

2. Inflation: Higher prices for goods and services. Rising prices are having a negative impact on local African American household budgets. Like most Americans, 2025 found Americans paying drastically more for groceries and gasoline. Inflation sustained price increases across the American economy reducing the buying power of each dollar. Most financial experts including erone Powell, Chairman of the Federal Reserve, have place the blame for inflation on the economic policies of the Trump Administration. The Trump Administration tariffs policy is a primary factor driving up higher prices and inflation. “It’s really tariffs that are causing most of the inflation over overshoot” Powell said after the latest Fed meeting in early December of this year.

3. The third ranked issue of concern was the United States avoidable irresponsible Government shutdown which ended on November 12, the longest US government shutdown in history. During the shutdown at least 670,000 federal employees were laid off and about 730,000 kept working with out pay. The shutdown occurred because the Republicans in the US Senate refused to extend subsidies for the Affordable Care Act (Obamacare). Some 24 million Americans who don’t have insurance through their job or a public program like Medicaid would lose their health insurance. The Democrats in the US Senate refused to support the Republican short term bill because it would not extend insurance coverage to the 24 million people on Obamacare. Eight US Senate Democrats broke ranks and voted for the Senate to move forward on compromise legislation that reopen the government Their decision was labeled as a “betrayal” and “pathetic” by some of the most prominent members of the Democratic Party.

boro City Council elections were held November 4, 2025. The primary election was on October 27, 2025. The winners of the General elections were Marikay Abuzuaiter, Mayor, Denise Roth, Hugh Holston, and Irving Allen At-Large. Crystal Black, won District 1, Cecile Crawford won District 2. April Parker, District 3, Adam Marshall District 4 and Tammi Thurn won Council seat District 5. There were three incumbents re turning to City Council out of the nine seats. Abuzuaiter, former Mayor Pro Tempore, was elected as Mayor. Incumbents Tammi Thurn and Hugh Holston were re-elected to the City Council.

Important factors to note regarding election results is as follows: (a) Robbie Perkins, former Mayor of Greensboro is a Republican and even though Greensboro City Council races are non-partisan, the emphasis on party affiliation by local Democratic Party activists was a major contributing factor for Perkins lost. The shadow of Trump hanging over Perkins campaign was toxic and a drag on the his Campaign. (b) Sharon Hightower, a 12-year incumbent lost to newcomer, Crystal Black. Even though Hightower had a track record of exemplary service to her constituents, her vote against the removal of toxic poisonous soil out of Greensboro was a major contributing factor for her loss. © April Parkers’ defeat of incumbent Zack Matheny. Parkers hard work grass root campaign sealed Matheny’s fate on election day. Greensboro’s Black Political Action Committee, the Simkins PAC had long endorsed Matheny’s oppotime care for our father.

Like the Jacksons, there are siblings across America who are splitting nights and weekends. There are spouses, sons and daughters like my mother, brother Yusef and sister, who have become full-time nurses. There are nieces, nephews and neighbors driving loved ones to dialysis and learning how to manage meds and feeding tubes.

The Rev. Jesse Jackson with his son, Jesse Jackson Jr., in Chicago in 2021.

As we celebrate Thanksgiving, let us pray for the unpaid caregivers across the country. The best way to give them thanks is to recognize the scale of what they do, the cost they bear and the policy fixes that could support them.

November is National Family Caregivers Month. An AARP-National Alliance for Caregiving report found that about 63 million Americans – nearly 1 in 4 U.S. adults – provided ongoing care to an adult or child with significant health or functional needs in the past year.

For most, this is not a weekend favor. Family caregivers spend an average of 27 hours a week providing care, and nearly a quarter provide 40 or more hours. It's a full-time job.

Estimates vary, yet the unpaid care provided by family members can be measured in the hundreds of billions of dollars each year saved in health care costs and the vast sums that would otherwise be spent on institutional care. As overinflated and expensive as health care is in the United States, it could be much worse if not for unpaid caregivers.

A widely cited AARP estimate puts the economic value of unpaid family caregiving at roughly $600 billion a year. Even conservative estimates place the cost to caregivers in lost wages and benefits at about $522 billion annually. When families provide care, the country gets a service worth more than many industries, while the caregivers themselves get stress and exhaustion. The financial hit is only part of the hardship. Caregiving often drives families into debt, forces reduced employment hours, factors into job exits and erodes retirement savings. Many caregivers spend a sizable share of their own income on household and medical costs for the person they love. Many trade career advancement, Social Security accrual and employer retirement benefits for the unpaid, indispensable work of keeping and caring for a loved one at home.

These burdens fall heavily on women who make up the majority of caregivers, and people of color and those of lower income who as caregivers more often experience the negative financial effects.

The mental and physical health consequences are also painful. Caregivers report elevated levels of emotional stress, depression and anxiety. A recent synthesis of studies shows higher rates of depression and emotional stress levels among caregivers. Many neglect their own health. Burnout and isolation are common.

The emotional weight of watching a loved one decline and managing complex medical needs takes a Hello, the present North Carolina State Legislature is as about as trifling and irresponsible as you can get. The only state in the country that has not passed a budget. Their priority has focused on gerrymandering to undermine democracy to keep power, and passing laws that allows every Tom, Dick or Harry to own a gun or an arsenal of weapons. But, you know, they have done one thing right while in Raleigh. They passed a law this summer to ban school kids from using cell phones in school. As flawed and irresponsible and derelict as they are, they got that one right.

Shout-Out

Good afternoon, Why do some people of the opposite sex think.... when someone smiles at you, or just being nice, It has to turn into....They want me!!!!...What happened to just being nice to each other? Why for some people being nice or kind, why does there have to be some ulterior motive?

Shout-Out

Hello, according to news reports, national guard Sarah Beckstrom, who was killed on duty, believed her deployment to Washington D.C. was “pointless” according to her former boyfriend. The National Guard can’t arrest, can’t police and can’t enforce the law in Washington D.C. All they can do is walk around and pick up trash, and garden because there’s nothing else they can legally do. Keeping them their isn’t security. Its political theater and its costing lives. And a judge ruled the National Guard in D.C. is illegal but this administration did nothing to remove them and ordered more guards in the meanwhile! They cannot do anything useful in D.C. Trump has basiccly made them targets and its disgusting!

Shout-Out

Hello, I just want to send a shout-out and congratulations to all the candidates elected to the Greensboro City Council and sworn in earlier this week. Most of the council members elected are newcomers and will be serving their first term. I am excited about this new council, they have such vigor and enthusiasm and seem so sincere to want to serve the citizens of Greensboro. There is somewhat of a slight generation shift and this is the first time Greensboro will have a majority Black city council. This council will be interesting to watch. Traditional issues will continue to be the focus, but there will be time and attention devoted to those issues unique to black voters and taxpayers in Greensboro? Bingham Park, police accountability and fair and equitable contracting opportunities for Black owned businesses and contractors have come to my mind. There will be a learning curve for the new council members but looking at their community work and the track record of community service of those newly elected, I am optimistic, I’m praying for them and I wish them well.

Shout-Out

Guess What? The con artist, liar in chief in the White House is getting ready to plunge us into a war with Venezuela. Illegally bombing so called small drug boats and killing those on board without verification of who they are and whether they are carrying drugs or fishing. What a hoax and a con job on the American people. Most official and US assessment identify Mexico and Columbia as the primary countries through which the largest amount of illegal drugs come to America, especially cocaine and fentanyl. Venezuela does not traffic fentanyl at all. Well, why Venezuela? Real simple. Oil. The largest oil mineral resource in the world is Venezuela. The second largest is Nigeria. The lethal assault at sea and the bullying of Venezuela is not about Drugs, it’s about oil. Money, mo money and mo money and mo money for Trump to raid the US treasury for him and his family. Add in tariffs revenue and you have a real treasure trove. Venezuela and war. What a con job. Oil for American blood.

Shout-Out

What’s up G-times. Everyone says love hurts, but that is not true. Loneliness hurts. Rejection hurts. Losing someone hurts. Envy hurts. Everyone gets these things confused with love, but in reality love is the only thing in this world that covers up all pain and makes someone feel wonderful again. Good morning!

Our African American experience in America teaches that law enforcement without law is a warning sign. From slave patrols to Jim Crow policing, from chain gangs to COINTELPRO, Black Americans have repeatedly experienced state power exercised outside legal restraint. In each era, authorities justified extraordinary measures by claiming necessity, security, or public order. Slave patrols operated without warrants. Jim Crow arrests required no real evidence or charges. COINTELPRO surveilled, detained, and destroyed Black leaders without due process. Here in North Carolina in 1898, Wilmington's multiracial democratically elected government was violently overthrown while authorities stood by. Black residents were murdered, driven out and stripped of political power—no warrants, no trials and no accountability. Lawlessness decided who belongs and a failure to comply with the law followed.

The lesson is unmistakable: when law enforcement is untethered from law, Black communities are among the first to suffer—and never the last. ICE tactics that involve unmarked vehicles, unidentified masked agents, and sudden disappearances revive this legacy. African Americans recognize the pattern because we have lived it.

The Constitution's promises were forged through Black struggle. The 5th and 14th Amendments, due process and equal protection exist and equal protection—exist because of Black resistance to arbitrary detention, violence, and state abuse.

When the Government Makes People Disappear, African Americans Know the Danger

These rights were not theoretical gifts; they were hard-won safeguards against precisely the kind of unchecked power now being normalized. When government detains people without due process, it is not merely violating immigrant rights. It is eroding constitutional protections that African Americans fought generations to secure. Any weakening of due process dishonors that struggle and invites regression.

Disappearance has always been a tool of racial control. Throughout American history, the disappearance of Black bodies—whether through lynching, forced labor, prison camps, or secret detentions—served a political purpose: to terrorize communities and enforce obedience. No paperwork, no explanation, and no accountability. When ICE removes people from public view without transparency, it activates the same mechanism of fear. The goal is not simply enforcement—it is deterrence through intimidation. African Americans understand this tactic because it has been used against us for centuries.

Collective punishment and racialized enforcement are nothing new. We know that law enforcement operates in a vacuum. Practices that target one group quickly spill over to others—especially when racial profiling and discretionary power are involved. History shows vagrancy laws became mass incarceration, “War on Drugs” became racialized surveillance, Stop and Frisk became unconstitutional erosion. ICE street actions normalize suspicion, racial profiling, and guilt by appearance, conditions that Black folk have always been forced to navigate.

Silence has never protected Black communities. Every expansion of state power in US history has been justified by targeting a group portrayed as dangerous, disposable, or outside the national “we.” African Americans know that accepting such logic never leads to safety; it leads to vulnerability. Solidarity is survival. African Americans have long understood that freedom is indivisible. When one group's rights are stripped, others soon follow. That is why Black leaders—from Frederick Douglass to Ella Baker to Martin Luther King Jr.—insisted that justice cannot be selective. Opposing ICE's authoritarian tactics is not an act of charity toward immigrants. It is an act of self-preservation rooted in historical wisdom.

For us as African Americans, ICE tactics that involve disappearing people off the street without due process are not merely policy failures—they are historical echoes. They resemble the same structures of unaccountable power that have been used to police, punish, and control Black lives since the nation's founding.

We know where this road leads because we have walked it before. A democracy that tolerates secret arrests is not strong; it is fragile. Our history as a people teaches us that the first duty of a people who have survived repression is to recognize it early and resist it loudly.

The NASCAR antitrust trial has ended without an official winner. And without an official loser either.

Michael Jordan and the other plaintiffs settled with the sanctioning body of stock car racing, ending a fierce legal battle over whether NASCAR has used anticompetitive practices and harmed Jordan's racing team.

The refusal to settle over the past year led to a showdown in federal court between NASCAR and the plaintiffs: 23XI Racing, co-owned by Jordan and driver Denny Hamlin, and Front Row Motorsports. But on Thursday, Dec. 11, with the high-stakes trial moving closer to a verdict, the settlement brought the case to an abrupt halt at U.S. District Court of the Western District of North Carolina in Charlotte.

Meegan Hollywood, an attorney with Shinder Cantor Lerner law firm who specializes in antitrust cases, told USA TODAY Sports on Wednesday, Dec. 10 that a settlement would not be a surprise. The alternative was to leave the outcome in the hands of the jury.

"It's risky on both sides," Hollywood said.

Barak Orbach, a professor at the University of Arizona with an expertise with antitrust law, told USA TODAY Sports "one possibility to consider is that this entire trial (was) part of negotiation strategy."

The financial terms of the settlement are confidential and will not be released, according to a joint statement.

distinctive toll.

With an aging population – by 2030, projections suggest that more than 1 in 5 Americans will be over 65 – advancing solutions to allow people to age at home is critical to America's economic stability.

Paid family and medical leave would keep people connected to employers and income during intense caregiving episodes and reduce forced job exits. Employers can help with flexible scheduling, caregiver-friendly benefits and manager training so workers can ask for help without being penalized.

We owe dignity to caregivers. Caregiver tax credits or cash stipends for low- and middle-income families would blunt out-of-pocket costs and debt. Expanding Medicaid and Department of Veterans Affairs-funded programs that pay family caregivers a modest wage, now available in some states, recognizes caregiving as work and targets help where it is most needed.

Congress should bring that policy to the federal level.

Caregivers are in crisis. How bad it is depends on where you live, new data shows.

It's time to build a more robust community support infrastructure. We must increase funding for home- and community-based services, expand respite care so family members can get some sleep and tend to their own health, and broaden caregiver training programs so family members aren't expected to perform medical tasks without proper guidance.

We should also invest in caregiver mental health services and peer support networks. Treating caregiver stress is preventive care for families and for our nation's health system.

Morally, we owe dignity to those who keep loved ones safe at home. Pragmatically, supporting caregivers prevents hospital readmissions, delays costly institutionalization and keeps experienced workers attached to the labor market. Supporting family caregivers is an investment that pays America back in health, social stability and economic sense.

To every family caregiver reading this: Thank you and God Bless you. You are not failing if you struggle. You are not selfish if you need a break. There are communities, services and public officials who want to help. This immensely difficult work can and should be a bit easier.

Civil rights attorney Ben Crump scores $779 million verdict for Black family

by Stacy M. Brown
December 11, 2025

BLACKPRESSUSA Newswire) – In an America shaped once again by racial hostility and the rollback of diversity protections under the Trump administration, renowned civil rights attorney Benjamin Crump continues to force institutions to confront the value of Black life. His latest victory, a $779.3 million wrongful death verdict for the killing of security guard Lewis Butler, lands as a direct challenge to a system that has long accepted negligence toward Black workers as an unavoidable cost of doing business.

Evidence at trial showed that the café, operated by Fortune MGT 2023 LLC and Manish Kumar Patel, failed to report a previous armed robbery on Oct. 25, 2023, during which a firearm was stolen. The complaint alleged that the owners concealed the earlier robbery because managers allegedly knew illegal gambling was taking place inside. The same stolen weapon was later used to kill Butler as he attempted to protect a cashier.

For his widow, Kimberly Butler, the verdict was only one part of what must come next. ‘There’s definitely some changes needed. Some attention needs to be brought,” Butler said. “He put himself in the line of fire to save someone else’s life.”

Crump, who has been called “Black America’s Attorney General” for the sweeping impact of his civil rights work, spoke to the weight of the jury’s decision. “The verdict means so much for different reasons,” Crump reasoned. “Obviously, we want to compensate the family for this monumental loss that they suffered, this monumental wrong that this jury verdict helped to have a monumental right.”

He also noted Kimberly Butler’s determination to turn her loss into reform.

“The second thing is Mrs. Kimberly Butler testified, since her husband was murdered, she’s doing everything she can to try and get these internet gambling cafes shut down because she thinks that they are an invitation for criminal activity,” Crump said.

The celebrated attorney also made clear that collecting on the judgment will be a fight of its own, but one he intends to pursue relentlessly.

“We absolutely plan on getting some compensation for the family,” Crump proclaimed. “We may have to attach garnishments and liens to property and bank accounts, but we are dogmatic in pursuit of making sure we get compensation from those who the jury felt were responsible for this unnecessary, tragic death.”

The nearly $780 million verdict stands among the largest negligent-security wrongful death awards in Florida history. It arrives during a political moment in which federal civil rights enforcement has been weakened and justice is becoming harder to obtain for marginalized communities.

Crump’s impressive record displays a consistent demand for accountability. He has represented the families of Trayvon Martin, Michael Brown, Stephon Clark, Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor, George Floyd, the children of Flint, and nine Black women in the Holtzclaw rape case. His work contributed to a $27 million settlement for the Floyd family, a $12 million settlement for the Taylor family, a $641 million settlement for Flint’s children, more than $200 million in banking while Black cases, and a $411 million verdict for Duane Washington.

His leadership extends beyond the courtroom. Crump recently pledged $50,000 to support the Black Press of America, strengthening institutions that preserve Black history, Black truth, and Black testimony. It is one of many reasons he is widely regarded as Black America’s Attorney General.

Another Rise, Another Fall: What Sherrone Moore's Downfall Can Teach Us

A $30 million future vanished overnight, joining a growing list of high-profile implosions with familiar themes

By Okla Jones, Essence Magazine

Sherrone Moore

Shannon Sharpe

Ime Udoka

Sherrone Moore's decline becomes crazier by the day. Less than two years after taking over one of the most prestigious programs in college football, Moore was fired with cause by the University of Michigan, accused of engaging in an inappropriate relationship with a staff member. Hours later, he was arrested following a police response to an alleged assault near Ann Arbor. By night's end, a man who had inherited a national championship-caliber program was sitting in jail, his future suddenly unclear.

Moore is only 39 years old, and reports had the value of his coaching deal near $30 million. With a future that once seemed bright now likely closed, this story sounds all too familiar, especially in recent years: The pattern involving Black men, white women, and professional collapse.

Take Shannon Sharpe. Few athletes have transitioned into media with the kind of success he's had. Two Super Bowl rings, a gold jacket, and then a second act that somehow became even bigger. After nearly two decades on television, a breakout run on Skip and Shannon, Club Shay Shay, Nightcap, several awards, and a stint on ESPN, he had arrived. By early 2024, Sharpe was richer, louder, and more visible than ever.

Then, it all went down the drain.

Sharpe was accused of sexual assault by Gabriella Zuniga, an internet model he met when she was 19. The lawsuit sought more than $50 million. Sharpe denied the allegations, calling the relationship consensual but "rocky." A settlement was reached, and the case was dismissed—but ESPN moved on without him. Just like that, the biggest platform of his media career disappeared.

With Sharpe's situation, it's particularly saddening because he had finally reached his peak. Years of credibility, relevance, and goodwill evaporated almost instantly. The relationship itself became the headline, and whether the legal case ended quietly or not, the damage had already been done.

And of course, there's Ime Udoka, whose story is still talked about (at least within my friend group; fumbling Nia Long is insane). In 2022, Udoka had the Boston Celtics on the doorstep of an NBA title. He was widely respected. Young, sharp and one of the few Black head coaches in the league. The kind of hire franchises claim they want to make more often. Shortly thereafter, he was suspended for an entire season after violating team policies by engaging in an "improper relationship." Udoka lost his job, and his relationship with Long ended. His reputation took a hit that followed him even after he was hired by the Houston Rockets, and could last for the rest of his career.

What makes these stories really disheartening is imbalance between what these men had and how quickly it all slipped away. Black men in positions of authority already operate under tighter scrutiny. Their mistakes are magnified, and their second chances are fewer. When a white coach messes up, there's context. When a Black coach messes up, it's over.

Moore and Udoka may have irreparably damaged themselves, and they also made it easier for institutions to hesitate the next time a Black candidate comes up. However, none of this should absolve personal responsibility. Self-discipline matters, because power requires restraint. These men had everything they worked for—legacy, influence, financial security, or even all three. But they didn't lose it because of talent or effort. They lost it because they couldn't sit still when it mattered most.

And the cost, as always, extends beyond them.

Hugging and Cuddling, can reduce Depression, calm Anxiety and strengthen the Immune System naturally Cuddling and hugging aren't just warm gestures research shows they offer real benefits for both emotional and physical health.

When people share comforting touch, the body releases oxytocin, sometimes called the "feel-good hormone." This chemical boost promotes a sense of safety, connection, and calm. At the same time, levels of cortisol the hormone linked to stress naturally decline, helping ease tension, boost mood, and support emotional balance.

Regular affectionate contact can even support physical health. It may help lower blood pressure and heart rate, reduce inflammation, and give the immune system a gentle boost. These effects show how deeply connected our emotional world is to our physical wellbeing.

In a time when many people feel stressed or disconnected, simple acts like hugging loved ones, holding hands, or spending time close to the people you care about can make a meaningful difference. Small moments of connection can help strengthen relationships, lift your mood, and support a healthier, happier life.
